“ My favorite times growing up were staying with my Aunt Jean and Uncle Lee. I absolutely adored my Uncle Lee. He always made me feel safe and loved. I have so many wonderful memories: shelling corn, Uncle Lee (and Aunt Jean) teaching us to drive the pickup, learning what cow manure was. He patiently listened to my childhood chatter with a smile. I appreciated Uncle Lee's gentle soul and wondered at his imperturbable equanimity. I so admired both. I will miss him greatly and look forward to seeing him again one day. Rest easy.

“ I was lucky enough to know Lee all my life as one does in rural communities. He was always quiet but loyal and strong and did the right thing even when no one was watching.

As a farmer from birth, he always enjoyed watching the earth renew itself. He respected the land and took the responsibility of caring for it seriously. I was always proud and pleased to have him as a member of our family

One thing that he and his brothers did that few may remember but is reminiscent of his steady and unassuming nature was his consistent Sunday School attendance as a boy. Children in the Sunday School of our Methodist church got an attendance pin if you missed two Sundays or fewer in a calendar year. For each additional year of near-perfect attendance, you were rewarded with a little bar to attach to the bottom of the pin, resembling a military medal. As your years of near-perfect attendance increased, the rows of the medal increased. The Moore boys always had the longest medals in the church, even longer than my sisters or mine. I always envied them for their long medals.
